Honoring those who serve

Veterans seek support from the Las Cruces community

By Susy Castillo | Staff Writer

Friday will mark Veteran's Day and the Las Cruces and New Mexico State University community will take their part in celebrating those who have served the nation.

The 2011 Las Cruces Veterans Day Parade will be held on Friday Nov. 11 starting at 9 a.m. The parade will start and end at the Loretto Town Center. The parade will travel north on Main Street and continue onto N. Church Street, east on E. Hadley Avenue and then south on N. Campo Street.

The Student Veterans Association is an organization providing the chance for students to belong to a group with similar past experiences. The association will also be in the Las Cruces Veterans Day Parade. The NMSU SVA is a branch of Student Veterans of America.

"It gets all of us veterans together and it gives us a voice on campus," William Schwettmann, SVA president said.

Schwettmann said it is difficult for veterans to get out of "military mode" and into "college mode," in order to do well in college.

"This gives us a way to rely on our friends to help us get us through the college experience," Schwettmann said.

According to the Military Times, eight of the 10 schools receiving the most post-9/11 GI Bill funds last year have dropout rates as high as 69 percent for those working on associate and bachelor degrees.

"Veterans get into college and don't feel like they belong and eventually drop out," Schwettmann said.

Schwettmann said SVA helps veterans with common issues to find each other and share common ground, and is important so students can stay informed about veterans. Schwettmann said SVA is a good educational tool for many students who want to pursue the military after the completion of their degree.

"We served our country," Schwettmann said. Schwettmann said even if students don't want to celebrate Veterans Day, students should at least understand that veterans fought so that they have that choice, to celebrate it or not.

Schwettmann said veterans appreciate an acknowledgment of their services.

"Even if students want to come by an event and just say thank you, that's all that we could ever ask for," Schwettmann said.

Roger Green, Rolling Thunder board member, is a veteran and encourages students and community members to attend the Las Cruces Veterans Day Parade.

Green said he hopes for a higher turn out from young people at the event, however he believes young people are more concerned with their own lives, such as when the new Droid or video game is going to be released.

"I know I won't see that many people because nobody cares," Green said."Veterans are the ones who gave them the right to do all these things."

Green said many young soldiers die in combat and young people now-a-days do not care.

"The veterans' parade is trying to show the veterans that somebody still cares," Green said.

Survival Straps will be sold during the New Mexico State vs. Fresno State football game Saturday, which will honor military veterans.

The survival strap will feature the Aggie crimson color. The strap can be worn as a bracelet and is made from military spec 550 paracord, which can hold up to 550 pounds if unraveled.

Schwettmann said Special Forces invented the Survival Straps, which were used in emergencies such as rifle slings.

"You can take the bracelet apart and use it for whatever you need," Schwettmann said.

Schwettmann said SVA is going to sell the bracelets as an "Aggie survival strap," to benefit veterans.

Editorial: NCAA sends mixed message

By Minnesota Daily Editorial Board | UWIRE

Less than two weeks ago, the NCAA approved a package that gives universities the option to give a $2,000 stipend to student-athletes with full scholarships. The money would pay for what the NCAA calls the "full cost of attendance," outside of tuition, room and board, books and fees for college athletes.

Even though NCAA President Mark Emmert says that university leaders are "adamant" about not allowing students to be paid to play, the new reform certainly sends mixed signals. It is no secret that universities make money from athletic programs and draw in prospective students as well.

The question is whether the University of Minnesota's focus is on these student-athletes and their education or on reaping benefits from collusion with professional leagues.

Among the approved package was an increase in the academic eligibility requirements for student-athletes. Formerly, a C grade average was required of incoming freshman and junior transfers. Now it is a C+ grade. This not only shows a lack of emphasis placed on academic performance for athletes, it mixes the NCAA's message — does the NCAA want student athletes to be students or athletes, amateurs or professionals?

Sweetening the package for prospective students to choose athletics over an academic focus in their education — in programs where few will enter professional leagues — is questionable promotion by the NCAA.

Young men and women must seriously question the values and motives of the NCAA when they make declarations such as these. Are they helping young individuals succeed in forming part of our society or are they exploiting a class of revenue generators for universities?

MORTORCYCLE PARADE for TOTS

The annual rally rolls back into town

By Grace Gutierrez | Staff Writer

Motorcyclists will host the 31st annual Las Cruces Motorcyclists Toys for Kids Parade, a bike-rally fundraiser that donates toys to Tresco TOTS and other organizations.

The bike rally starts with a parade from Mesilla Valley Mall to Dickerson's Event Center. Once at Dickerson's, there will be a bike show and party complete with dinner, door prizes, live music and vendors.

"I recognize that many students own motorcycles so we encourage them, as part of the general population of motorcycle riders, to participate in the parade and event following," Mack Adams, member of the organizing committee.

The primary beneficiary of the Toys for Kids Motorcycle Parade is Tresco TOTS, the only non-profit early intervention agency in southern New Mexico.

According to toysforkids-lc.org, "TOTS provides physical, occupational, speech and developmental therapy, among other services, to children from birth to three years of age who have or are at risk for developmental delays."

The toys donated to TOTS will be delivered to children that are at risk or have the delays, so specialized gifts are appreciated.

"Toys that encourage development of fine and gross motor skills, language, thinking, music and creativity are great choices," Adams said.

Even though the developmental toys are appreciated, all toys will be donated to a good cause.

"We encourage donation of developmental toys, which are good for all children and most useful for the children served by Tresco TOTS," said Adams. "However, toys of any type are welcomed by the organizations we support."

The children will be getting the toys around Christmas by the volunteers from the Tresco TOTS program and the various non-profit organizations.

Donations are accepted at the TFK parade event as well as before and after the event. Donations are collected at Tresco TOTS at 2325 E. Nevada or Wheelsport at 105 Hanks Dr. in Mesilla Park.

Even though Tresco TOTS gets most of the donations, many other agencies have received donations from TFK including Gospel Rescue Mission, La Piñon, Respite Care, Sensory Kids, and Jesse's Bikes for Tykes, according to the website. Coats for Kids, Prison Family Services, Mesilla Valley Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA), Santa's Helper Program, Salvation Army, Mesquite Community Center, San Andres and Las Cruces High School GRADS Programs, FYI Girls and Boys Shelters, La Clinica de Familia, Healthy Start, and Valley View Multiple Disabilities Parents Committee have received donations in the past as well.

Registration for the event begins at 9 a.m. and ends at 11:30 a.m at the mall on the day of the parade. However, anybody can attend the bike show at Dickersons with $10 and a toy valued at $7 or more.

CLABS launches Chipas novel

By Susy Castillo | Staff Writer

The Center for Latin American and Border Studies sponsored a book launch of Dr. Christine Eber and "Antonia's" book, "A Journey of a Tzotzil-Maya Woman of Chiapas, Mexico."

The event, which was held Nov. 3 at 6 p.m. at the Nason House, featured a reading and discussion with Dr. Christine Eber, a retired NMSU Professor.

"A Journey of a Tzotzil-Maya Woman of Chiapas, Mexico" is about Antonia, a woman from Chiapas, who struggles for human rights.

The Zapatista movement is a group of indigenous people who rose up to draw attention to the economic margin division of indigenous people in Mexico. Eber said the people attempt to "get their human rights recognized and insert their voices into the national dialogue."

"We have seen with the Occupy movement, people are beginning to question the dramatic inequalities in our own society," Eber said.

Eber said the Zapatista movement helps people understand what it is to work against oppressive conditions and social injustices.

"Through Antonia's story, we are able to learn how to stand up for justice in our own community," Eber said.

The Occupy movement helps "us to work together across our differences," Eber said. "It is easy to work together if everybody has equal power rather than be competing with each other for power."

The Spanish edition of "A Journey of a Tzotzil-Maya Woman of Chiapas, Mexico" was translated by Mayra Valtierrez, an M.A. student, but has yet to be published.

Valtierrez said it is important to have both a Spanish version as much as an English version because of the relationship that the United States has with Mexico.

"She [Antonia] is an indigenous woman from Mexico," Valtierrez said. "It is important that people in her country, who make political decisions, can read it and have access to it."

Many weavings from Chiapas' co-ops were available for pur-

Student creates Braille App

By Gabriella Ferrari | Managing Editor

A New Mexico State University senior developed a Braillewriter app for tablets, allowing the visually impaired utilize cost-effective touch screen technology.

Working at the Army High Performance Computing Research Center at Stanford University, Adam Duran, senior aerospace major, created an application that allows the visually impaired to type Braille on a touch screen device. It received the top award during the summer program.

Originally, Duran was assigned to create an optical character recognition application that would take a picture on a mobile device or tablet and convert it to audio speech format

But he said they asked themselves 'How does someone who's visually impaired even interact with a tablet?'

After talking with the office of accessible education, the idea transformed into the Braillewriter it is today.

"It actually has the buttons find the fingers rather than the fingers find the button," Duran said.

It works like any other Braille keyboard of eight keys to do note taking, editing, math, can even email. Duran said they are going to try to make it work with Twitter and Facebook in the future.

Current Braillewriters cost upwards of $6,000 and their only functionality is typing. Tablets only cost a couple of hundred with expanded functionality.

The visually impaired can also use the iPhone, but Duran said it relies on touching the screen and moving until a user finds the correct option.

"Having the full functionality of the keyboard is going to allow them to type faster and social network faster, instead of having to do this pecking type of thing," Duran said.

Duran said he has heard praise and received press clippings from all over the world including the United Kingdom, New Zealand and Brazil. A mother even contacted Stanford and said her daughter was told she could never use a tablet, but now she can.

"It was nice to hear someone was told they couldn't do something but because of us they can," Duran said.

The app speaks for itself, but Duran said the biggest thing he is trying to do give New Mexico State recognition like, "If a student from there did this, what else can they (NMSU) do?"

EMS Conference continues at LC Convention Center

CPR manikins serve as a useful educational tool for EMTs learing new techniques for Cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Cherish Marquez/theRound Up

By Cherish Marquez | Staff Writer

The 2011 Southern Rio Grande EMS Conference will be held at the new Las Cruces Convention Center from Nov. 7-12.

There will be a continuing series of education for the attendees focusing on new technology and product updates.

There will be at least four sessions offered which will allow vendors attending the conference an opportunity to provide presentations on new products and technologies in a classroom setting.

If your company has a new, innovative product that would like to be showcased at the conference, you are urged to contact Region II EMS as soon as possible.

The conference will be held for six days, during these six days several classes and labs will be offered, such as a Heart and Lung Lab, Pediatric Hands On Skills Lab and a Pre Hospital Trauma Life Support Instructor Class.

During the conference there will be several presenters from a national to a local level and AHA instructor classes which involve BLS, ACLS and PALS.

National Speakers will include Dennis Edgerly, currently a Paramedic Education Coordinator for the Paramedic Education Program at HealthONE EMS has been a frequent presenter at EMS conferences around the country.

Tim Hillier will also be a speaker attending the conference. Hillier began his career as a volunteer "Ambulance Driver," he continued his passion and currently holds certifications in several areas.

The Preliminary conference workshops that will be offered during the six day period will be, a Paramedic Refresher, Tactical Combat Casualty Care Course, and many more courses, which range from $50 to $400 that include labs and workshops.

Anthony Esparza, a major in information and communication technology at New Mexico State University is attending the conference.

"This will be my first time attending the conference, I will be taking a refresher course for EMTs, all emergency personnel have to continue their education with these types of classes to renew or license every two years," said Jose Salayandia.

By the end of the preliminary conference the core conference will begin Nov. 11, which will start off with a registration and welcome breakfast, kicking off several sessions which will include topics ranging anywhere from fatalities in children to alcohol abuse.

Upon attending the conference the Region II board will be celebrating New Mexico's best in EMS and trauma care with their annual awards banquet.

Those who feel that they are low on resources to attend the

Sorority pledges to be alcohol free

By Susy Castillo | Staff Writer

Kayla Minser, president of Gamma Xi chapter at New Mexico State University, said it makes her proud Delta Zeta was among the first in the Greek world, she said she likes how proactive the national concil is.

"I really like how Delta Zeta isn't afraid to make a change," Minser said. "We are not necessarily by standards; we take action when we see something that needs to be changed."

Minser said even when campus was not dry, Gamma Xi's house was alcohol free. Minser said having alcohol-free housing is very important because that way no one will feel pressured or uncomfortable around alcohol.

For that reason, the majority of Gamma Xi's events are alcohol-free. Minser said it is important to have alcohol-free events to have a safe environment for students.

"You shouldn't have the need to feel pressured to drink especially because there are a lot of alcohol related deaths and accidents," Minser said.

According to the 2009 CORE survey, 42 percent of NMSU students report that they either never drink or drink very infrequently, defined as six or fewer times a year.

There were more than 120 on campus arrests in 2009 due to alcohol violations according to the NMSU police department.

"This past school year, the deaths of at least seven U.S. college students have been tied to the excessive consumption of alcohol," former NMSU president, Michael Martin wrote in 2005. "Tragically, the deaths included those of two New Mexico State University students."

Minser said that even though all of campus has alcohol-free housing, there are still incidents of alcohol use on campus.

"We understand that there are a lot of alcohol related accidents," Minser said. "By removing the alcohol from the situation, we can remove that risk."

According to the NMSU Annual Campus Safety and Security Report released Sept. 30, alcohol is strictly prohibited for those below 21, and abuse of alcohol by anyone is prohibited. Anyone caught selling or giving alcohol to a minor is guilty of a fourth degree felony in New Mexico.

NMSU supports enforcement of alcohol and drug laws by all law enforcement agencies with jurisdiction, according to the Safety and Security Report. The Student Judicial Affairs Office also pursues administrative sanctions against those who violate university policies and state laws with penalties ranging from mandatory education programs up to expulsion from NMSU.

"Alcohol use is very prevalent on any college campuses," Minser said. "We think it is very important to raise awareness about it."

In support of national collegiate alcohol awareness week, I Have a Choice Campaign, sponsored by Delta Zeta, will be held outside Corbett Center Nov. 11 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Delta Zeta will be raising awareness about alcohol use and promoting safe alcohol policies.

"The least we can do is educate people and we feel that is one of the most important things," Minser said.

"We all have a good time sober," Minser said.

Minser said Gamma Xi housing and social events are safe and comfortable places which help strengthen their bond.

"We can be ourselves and not have to feel any kind of pressure," Minser said. "Our chapter is about the bond of sisterhood, not about alcohol use"

NMSU chosen for Sony Grants Scholarships

By Jessica Cervantes | Staff Writer

The nominees for the Sony Educational Scholarship Awards, sponsored by Sony Electronics and Intel Corporation, will be announced Nov. 16 at New Mexico State University.

NMSU was one of the 31 colleges selected from across the country in 2009 for the five year scholarship program and will award five undergraduate students and two junior faculty members, such as teacher's assistants, Sony computer packages.

After being approached by Sony, the Sony Grant Scholarship Committee developed a method for nominating undergraduate students who met the criteria of: sophomores having a 3.5 GPA, attend school at the main NMSU campus, have an emphasis on science, engineering or math and, most importantly, are first generation college students.

Head of the Sony Grant Scholarship Committee Shaun Cooper said the faculty members who will receive the scholarship are frequent users who have a need for technology and will help put positive feelings in individuals.

"We are grateful for the scholarships provided by Sony because it allows NMSU to increase efficiency," Cooper said.

The students' packages will include a Sony VAIO notebook, Walkman MP3 player and a Webbie high-definition camera with 16-gigabyte memory card. Junior faculty members will receive a Sony Reader, a 26-inch display BRAVIA television, a Sony VAIO notebook and a Sony HD Camcorder with 16-gigabyte memory stick.

"Scholarships and grants are important because it relieves financial stress from single parents who cannot afford for their child to go to college," Lucero said.

Majoring in debt

By Cherish Marquez | Staff Writer

Students who are graduating during the nation's economic crisis are experiencing what is now being referenced to as "majoring in debt."

Majoring in debt is a term used by graduating classes and scholars alike as a response to the increasing debt that follows students upon graduation.

According to Huffington Post, members of the college class of 2010 who took out loans owe an average of $25,250, which is a 5 percent increase from the year before.

Justin Pope, a writer for Huff Post College online website, explored the numbers that college graduates are being forced to face.

"Roughly two-thirds of the class of 2010 borrowed for college, and they were hit especially hard because the unemployment rate for new college graduates stood at 9.1 percent the year they graduated," Pope said.

9.1 percent is less than half of the rate of the population who only obtained a high school degree, which is a part of the unemployment rate.

Recently, President Barrack Obama announced a plan that

"We're going to make it easier so that students will have one payment a month at a better interest rate and give students a fact sheet that will be called 'know before you owe,' that will give students all the facts they need to make the decisions on their own," Obama said.

One of Obama's proposals is an Income-Based Repayment Plan, which is already in effect, but Obama plans to change the law from going in effect from 2014 to 2012.

The President also wants to change the 15 percent monthly charge from income to 10 percent, and instead of 25 years after the debt is forgiven, Obama is pushing to change it to 20 years.

For student Martha Rivera, a nursing major at New Mexico State University, the challenge with debt has a simple solution.

"Right now I am facing around $5,000 in debt, but I plan to pay back my student loans when I find a job within my field of nursing," Rivera said.

There are other several different options in which a graduate can take part in to chip away at the debt.

According to MSN Money and BusinessWeek, there are programs that have emerged in the past several months to aid students with their debt and, in some cases, completely forgiven.

"Some programs, such as SponsorChange.org, help graduates repay a portion of their student debt," BusinessWeek said.

Students should be warned that most of these programs apply to only federal student loans and very few private loans qualify.

Another way students can pay off their loans is to volunteer. One of the best-known volunteer options is AmeriCorps, which requires students to volunteer for a year full time.

During this time, the student receives a living stipend and once the year has ended, the student will be rewarded $4,725 that can be applied toward their student loans.

Other options include becoming a teacher, or switch careers, and get retrained to tap employer benefits or join the military or peace corps.

Aggie football looks for first ever win against Fresno

The New Mexico State football team looks to defeat Fresno State for the time in school history when the Bulldogs visit Aggie Memorial Stadium on Saturday for potentially the last time.

The Aggies are 0-17 all time against the Bulldogs, a mark that dates back to 1972 when the two teams first faced each other. The Bulldogs will be leaving the WAC next season to join the Mountain West Conference.

NM State comes in with a record of 3-6 following a 63-16 loss at 18th ranked Georgia. Fresno State, also at 3-6, is coming off a 41-21 loss at home to Louisiana Tech.

"They have a good football team," NM State coach DeWayne Walker said. "I know they struggle a little bit on the defensive side of the ball, but Pat Hill is one of the best coaches in college football and I know he's going to get his team ready to play."

The Fresno State defense has allowed an average of 36.2 points per game this season, an area the NM State offense can possibly exploit. However, Fresno State coach Pat Hill is not taking the Aggies lightly.

"I think New Mexico State has really improved under their coach," Hill said. "We've had some really tough games with them down there. This is going to be a big test for us as a football team."

Aggie quarterback Matt Christian has ties to Fresno State redshirting for the Bulldogs his first year out of high school before transferring to Palomar Junior College. He was then recruited by Walker to come play at NMSU where he has made the most of his opportunity.

"This year, he's playing lights-out," Walker said of Christian's performance this season. "For a guy to come in that really got passed over for the starting job at the beginning of the year, he remained positive and has really been a team guy. To see him having a good year says a lot about his character."

Christian's quarterback counterpart will be Fresno State's Derek Carr. The sophomore from Bakersfield, Ca. has thrown for 2270 yards and 18 touchdowns this season.

It will likely be another Western Athletic Conference offensive shootout on Saturday night when the Aggies and Bulldogs meet.

The New Breed

Aggie freshmen join forces

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

They came from three different cities, but have brought their talents to Las Cruces to be a part of the future of New Mexico State men's basketball.

Daniel Mullings, Eric Weary and Remi Barry are among the eight freshmen on the Aggie roster this season. Each brings his own skill set and personality to the team.

Mullings, from Toronto, Ontario, Canada, arrived on campus last year, but redshirted the 2010-11 season.

The Aggie guard said teammates like Hernst Laroche, Christian Kabongo and Renaldo Dixon helped make the move from Toronto to Las Cruces easier.

"They really helped me a lot, especially since they're from Canada as well," Mullings said. "It made it easier for me to fit in here because I was with them on a consistent bases, and it just made it easier for me to fit in to the whole culture."

Mullings said he learned a lot by watching from the sidelines last year and is ready to contribute to the team, especially on defense.

"I bring excitement on the defensive end," Mullings said. "I don't have a problem with playing defense and neither do the other two guards. Put us together and we can make a big defense force."

Mullings played 22 minutes in Aggies' exhibition against Eastern New Mexico. He finished the game with 13 points and four steals Weary, from New Orleans, Louisiana, was one of the top recruiting prospects in the state coming out of high school. He led the New Orleans metro area in scoring his senior season in high school, averaging 25.3 points per game.

Weary decided to become an Aggie because of the comfort and hospitality he experienced during his visit to NMSU. The 6-foot-5 guard said the team has great chemistry on and off the court and his senior teammates have helped him adjust to the new environment.

"The seniors picked me up like as their child," Weary said. "They took me in, and they just helped me work out and get better."

Weary said he can provide a variety of skills to the team and is prepared to learn anything head coach Marvin Menzies wants to teach him.

"I can knock down the three, I can get to the goal, shoot the free throw for them," Weary said. "Anything coach tells me to do, I can do for him."

Barry's journey to Division-I college basketball started in his hometown of Paris, France. He was recruited heavily by several schools including St. Johns, University of California Los Angeles (UCLA), California University and Colorado, but chose to come and play for NMSU.

Barry looks to provide the Aggies with aggressiveness on both sides of the ball. The Aggie forward scored seven points and grabbed six rebounds in team's exhibition on Nov. 2.

"I feel like I shot the ball pretty well," Barry said of his performance against the Greyhounds. "I made a shot from the three-point line and was able to get some rebounds. I'm looking forward to playing, having fun and getting a feel back for the game."

Mullings, Weary and Barry will continue to learn how to become better teammates both on and off the court and in a few years, the freshmen could use the experience learned now from the upperclassman to support future newcomers.

SOCCER SEASON ENDS IN SEMI-FINALS

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

The New Mexico State soccer team's season came to an end in the semi-finals of the Western Athletic Conference tournament as the Aggies fell to Fresno State 3-0.

NM State finished the season with a record of 10-8-3. Despite the loss, NM State coach Blair Quinn was pleased with what he saw from his team this year.

"There are a lot of positives to take away from it," Quinn said about the season. "It's hard to end like that, but unless you are winning the national championship you have to end the season at some point on a downer."

The team's ten wins is the most in Aggie soccer's young history. The Aggies also won their first WAC Tournament match when they defeated Hawai'i 2-1 in the first round.

Quinn said the program took steps in the right direction this season and looks forward to building off of this year.

"Some of the milestones and records we've reached are really big steps for the program and help us keep moving forward," Quinn said.

Aggie Cross Country vies for national tournament

By Anthony Ruff | Staff Writer

The New Mexico State cross country teams are gearing up for the 2011 National Collegiate Athletics Association Mountain Regional and are hoping to earn a trip to the NCAA Championship.

The men's race at the Mountain Regional is a 10K championship run and starts Saturday, Nov. 12 in Provo, Utah. The women begin their 6K championship run a short while after the men. The top two team finishers in the region automatically advance to the championships

"Our teams are full of fighters," assistant coach Meaghan Harkins said. "They go out each and every time and give all the effort they possibly can. This is the time to push your limits, and they will go out and do that this weekend."

The Aggies are working towards earning a trip to the NCAA's. If they do not finish in the top two at the Mountain Regional they still have a chance at an at-large bid. The top four runners whose team who did not advance will earn a spot in the national meet.

Both teams have had another solid year behind head coach Orin Richburg including winning the Kachina Classic in Las Cruces in September. This season, both the men's and women's teams have finished in the top 10 at all but one.

Junior Courtney Shultz was honored this season as the Western Athletic Conference Athlete of the Year after extremely strong performances at the WAC Championships, as well as during the regular season. She was also named to the first team all conference, along with her sister, Camille.

"It was great to perform so well and help the team finish high at the WAC," Shultz said. "This team has so much heart, and we are looking forward to the regional."

At the WAC Championships Oct. 29, the Aggies came away finishing second overall, and Shultz won first overall for the women's race. The win was the third straight in the WAC Championships for Shultz.

Aggie freshman Eric Fenton was named WAC Freshman of the Year after finishing with best time for a newcomer at the WAC Championships. Junior Jonah. Ruybalid was named All-WAC for the Aggie men this season.

"The team is prepared to do what we need to in order to advance," Ruybalid said. "Getting to the NCAA Championships is a goal that we all share and are chasing."

The Aggies appear focused and ready for the task at hand with the NCAA Championships right around the corner.

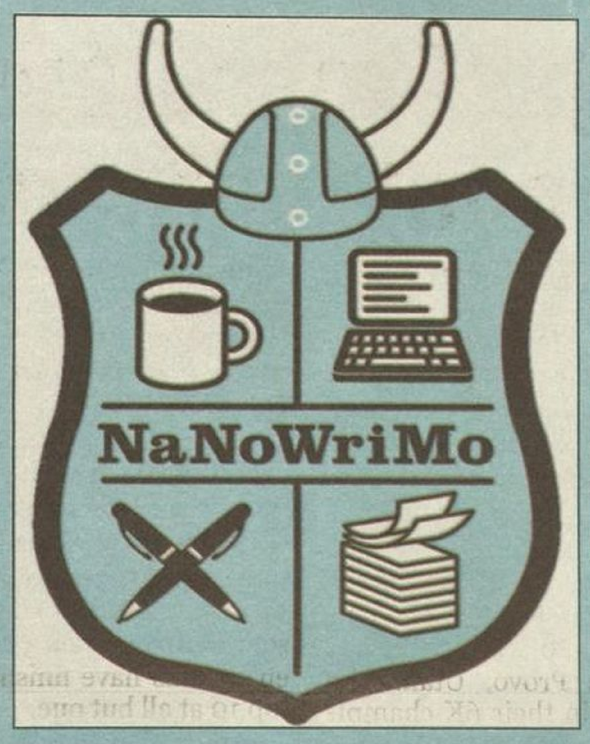
November marks National Novel Writing Month

By Allison Duarte | Staff Writer

NaNoWriMo, or for those who have never seen such a name, National Novel Writing Month has begun once again providing a unique opportunity for writers across the country.

NaNoWriMo begins every Nov. 1, with the goal of having its participants write a 50,000 word novel by the end of the month, Nov. 30, at 11:59:59 p.m.



Above: National Novel Writing Month is celebrated during the month of November. Cherish Marquez/theRoundup. Right: NaNoWriMo logo features all the necessities for writing a novel. Courtesy of nanowrimo.org/ theRound Up.

According to the National Novel Writing Month website, in 2010, they had over 200,000 participants.

New Mexico State University is having its share of NaNoWriMo mania, with are officially scheduled write-in group sessions for students and faculty to help aid in the support process of conquering such a difficult feat.

"This is my first year hosting and promoting this event," Charles B. Stanford, NMSU Library Archives and Special Collections employee, said about NaNoWriMo.

Stanford also said, "I've been working at NMSU since 2007 and thought it would be nice to do, so this year I finally did it."

Along with Stanford, William Jones, a student at NMSU, helps and serves as a liaison to plan events around Las Cruces for NaNoWriMo.

According to Stanford over twenty people showed up for the kick-off meeting held on Nov. 1.

Stanford has high hopes for this year's NaNoWriMo as it kicks into full gear.

"I hope that people will feel liberated by this," Stanford said. "I hope they see creative potential, and that this is not just an exercise to write, but also to expand knowledge."

The ultimate prize at the end of this trek would be to finish the 50,000 word novel and become published.

One of the most notable authors to come out of NaNoWriMo is Sara Gruen,who wrote "Water For Elephants," which is now a major motion picture.

For any student interested in joining NaNoWriMo, it is not too late. Students can join anytime, just as long as their novel is in by Nov. 30.

Official Write-in sessions will be held every Tuesday at 5:00 in the Barnes & Noble campus bookstore at NMSU.

Wrapping up NaNoWriMo will be a "Thank God It's over" party, held on Dec. 1 at Zuhl Library.

For more information students can log on to http://www.nanowrimo.org/en/regions/usa-new-mexico-las-cruces. There, students can join and chat with other peers, and together can try to conquer the task at hand.

MEET THE BAND

THE PHUZZ

Local band enjoys playing classic hits for fans

By Jose Salayandia | Staff Writer

Most bands out on the local scene today are looking to make a significant impact by capturing the imaginations of the audience with original music from the musicians themselves.

For local band, The Phuzz, it is also important to entertain the audience with their favorite classics.

The Phuzz is made up of lead singer Gillian Nevarez, Angela Brooks on bass and vocals, Cameron Trujillo on guitar and Rob Allen on drums.

The Phuzz is a band that enjoys doing musical covers, music which has already been written by a different artist but performed by a different one, usually with a twist.

Some of the covers that The Phuzz enjoys performing are songs by Ozzy Osbourne and The Rolling Stones but can also extend to artists such as Ke$ha and Billy Idol. The Phuzz is on a mission to please the crowd and to get them to dance on the audience floor.

The Phuzz has been together for six years, and like many local bands, has gone through some line up changes. Vocalist Gillian Nevarez said it was tough to find members but patience eventually paid off.

"Angela and I had been in a band prior to The Phuzz," Nevarez said. "When that band broke up, we hooked up with Rob and the original guitarist. When he didn't work out, we got Cameron."

Guitarist Cameron Trujillo said a lot of time had passed since he had joined the band and that it seemed like the time simply flew by.

"I was only 22 at the time," Trujillo said.

The Phuzz has played shows in Alamagordo, Ruidoso and even Albuquerque.

With the Las Cruces music scene at its worst state in years, The Phuzz has not played too many shows in the area. Trujillo said that the local scene is simply not up to par anymore.

"Its gone downhill," Trujillo said. "There's a lot of good bands around Cruces. I don't think they get the exposure they deserve or get compensated very well for what they put in"

The music scene around Las Cruces was once full of life and a wide variety of talent, but unfortunately suffered a huge blow when different music venues started closing. Despite the lack of life in the local scene, bands continue to fight on and entertain while remembering the good times at their favorite venues. Trujillo reminisced about his favorite spot to play at.

"The best place I ever played at was The Club. It was underground and the sound was awesome, definitely a rock bar," Trujillo said. "They encouraged music. It didn't matter if you were the best or the worst. They gave everyone a chance."

The Phuzz has no plans of touring but will be planning a recording of their covers. For more information on the band, check them out on Facebook.

Art Occupies Wall Street

By Cherish Marquez | Staff Writer

The "99 percent" have overtaken Wall Street and so has their art, which has become a major source of unique expression for protestors in an effort of getting their voices heard.

Shepard Fairey recently contributed with an original piece titled, "You Are Invited to the Occupation Party," a poster created in a retro-style signifying the past movements of the 1960s and 1970s.

Art can be seen through the unique signs protesters put together, dually expressing individuals' ideas and demands, as well as their creativity. It is one outlet where students can be a part of the movement, whether it is through media or written and spoken word.

Examples of these creative and expressive signs are: "No War but the Class War," "I Can't Afford a Real Sign: I'm in the 99%", and "If Only the War on Poverty was a Real War, Then We Would actually be Putting Money into it."

Most recently, police have been taking these signs away from civilians in hopes of breaking up and erasing protestors.

"We have seen art taking many forms in Occupy Las Cruces," Smith said. "Every person present at any of the events or protest brings with them their very own unique and exciting perspective on art and how it fits into the Occupy movement as a whole as well as locally."

Student Patrick McKinley's favorite signs include pictures of the earth and how corporations do their part in destroying the earth.

"Many of the corporations have practices that are destroying the planet and the people that live on this planet," McKinley said. "The only way that things will change is if the whole community bans together and recognizes what's really needed to sustain life here. Those sometimes rudimentary drawings of earth on the Occupy signs represent that ideal to me."
