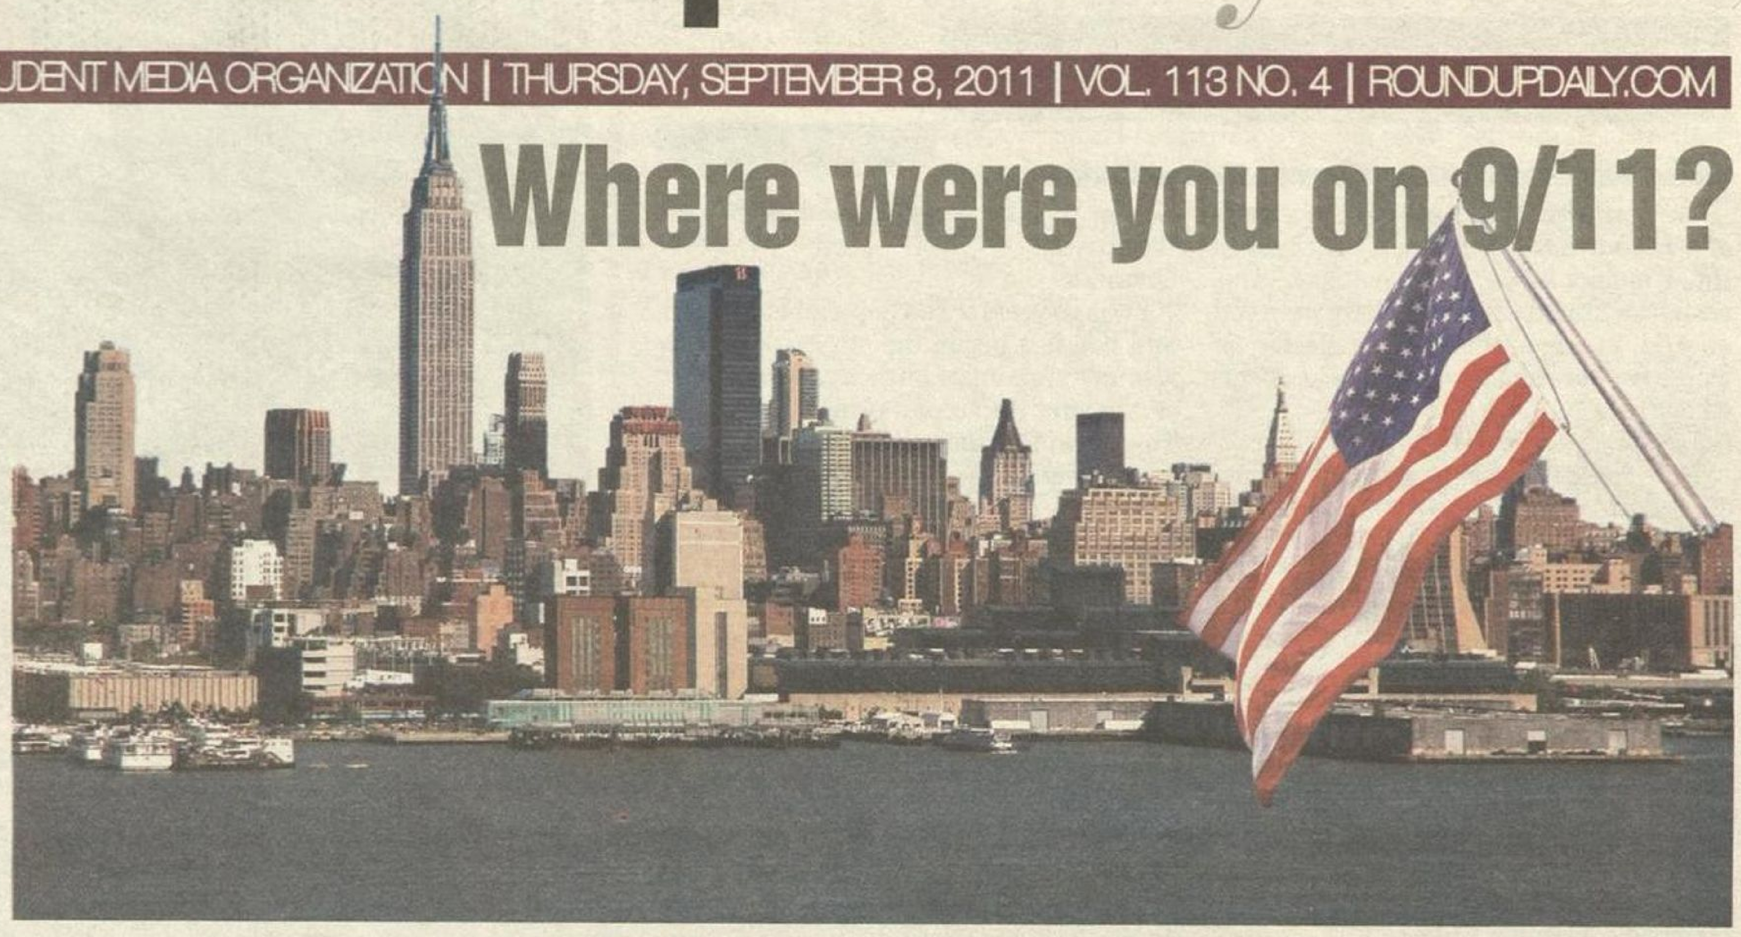
Where were you on 9/11?



Aggies reflect on 10-year anniversary

By Ivan Roman | Staff Writer

Sunday, Sept. 11, will mark the ten-year anniversary of the 9/11 terror attacks that brought down the World Trade Center Twin Towers, destroyed part of the Pentagon, and crashed United Airlines Flight 93 into a field in Pennsylvania.

The tragic events that unfolded that fateful day remain fresh in our national psyche. For those who lost loved-ones and colleagues, the day will always be a harrowing reminder of an event that has infamously become the worst attack on U.S. soil.

Ten years later and 2,000 miles away, we asked Aggies here on campus: Where were you on 9/11?

"Being in Boston at the time, there was a lot of panic," said Mass. native Robert Fleurent, a senior in Digital Filmmaking major. "We didn't know if any family members were on the flights, or if anyone knew what had happened... it was chaos."

Joel Fleurent, also a senior in Digital Filmmaking here at NMSU, remembers being in school that day. "We were watching the news a bit and I remember people starting to jump from the buildings and the teachers had to shut [the television] off." Joel was also in Boston at the time. "I guess I was too young to fully understand the devastation, but it was just shocking."

"On 9/11, my dad had just been stationed in Germany," said Brennan Lauritzen, a junior studying economics. "The security protocols were much stricter for a few months after, so getting on base took hours because they'd be searching every vehicle." Lauritzen followed in his father's footsteps and enlisted in the U.S. Army.

Ford Ballard, developmental director at KRWG, remembers that day vividly. "As soon as the news came over the wire we were gathered around the TV." Mr. Ballard recalls the significance of what had transpired. "We were able to bring in a TV just for our newsroom and we kept it going for two weeks after 9/11."

"I was at home with my son," Nena Turning, an Aggie mom described. "I turned to the news and we saw the second plane hit the South Tower, and it was really scary." Nena remembers exactly how she felt that day. "I knew then that we would be going to war."

Angela Jay, a senior majoring in creative writing, said, "[9/11] brought us together as a nation, and I really feel that there's a certain patriotism that you feel towards your country when something like that happens."

No matter where you were, how old you were, or who you were with; Americans will always remember the 9/11 attacks. The most important thing to take from such a tragedy is to never forget.

Aggies find Christ through student orgs.

By Allison Duarte | Staff Writer

While many religious denominations are present at New Mexico State University, all center on a simple yet powerful aspect, faith.

One denomination of the variety is Christianity, furthermore there are several organizations at NMSU that center on the Christian Faith.

The Christian Challenge is one group committed to spreading the gospel on campus, according to the group's website.

"You can be yourself here, with other places; you kind of have to put on a mask. Here we are all kind of nerds," said Brady Alberson, a freshman marketing major.

Alberson said the Christian Challenge offers students the opportunity to strengthen their personal relationship with God because of its strong community and fellowship.

The Christian Challenge has several leadership teams, each with different goals. One of group

Giant soda can, bigger problem

By Jessica Cervantes | Staff Writer

As the gigantic soda can in Corbett Center left Sept. 6, the message from New Mexico Clean and Beautiful resonated with New Mexico State University students.

The 8-foot-tall traveling showpiece, weighing 400 pounds, represents a pun on a littered soda can. The can was placed in Corbett Center at NMSU in part of the message that people rationalize littering by believing their litter is insignificant in such a large space no one will notice it. Therefore, New Mexico Clean and Beautiful created the soda can to represent the "gigantic" littering problem.

There are facts and statistics written on the can that inform on-lookers about the problem. The roads in New Mexico have 6,000 pieces of liter on every mile in which 38 percent are tobacco products, 22 percent is paper and 21 percent are "other products" with items such as wrappers and cans flooding the state.

Joni Newcomer, manager of environmental policy and sustainability under the facilities and services department said NMSU recycles about 30,000 pounds of recyclable material each week, which is about 5,000 pounds of mixed recycled material every day.

NMSU also participates in RecycleMaina and is currently ranked fifth in the Grand Champion category.

"Recycling is essential to set a good example for others," Newcomer said. "It also helps us to insure a healthy planet for all generations that follow us," Newcomer said.

Newcomer also said she encourages Aggies to reduce and reuse when possible such as carrying a re-useable cup with them.

"People should do their part in recycling because it reduces waste all around and it's good karma," said sophomore and biology major Jessica Vasquez.

The traveling soda can now be found at the Mesilla Valley Mall. For more information about recycling in New Mexico visit www.tossnomas.com.

LETTER FROM THE EDITORS

The terrorist attacks on Sept. 11 greatly affected our entire generation and changed the dynamics of the entire country. This week, the Round Up asked where were you on 9/11. In honor of such, we reflected on where we were and how the attacks affected our lives.

Gabriella

That Tuesday morning began like most others: breakfast and cartoons. Once my mother told me of the attacks, I turned straight to the news just as the second tower was hit. I was shocked, but even then, I didn't understand the gravity of the situation until I made it to school.

What I remember most vividly was how Diane Sawyer and Charles Gibson detailed the events. I was amazed how they told the news factually and empathetically while keeping their composure though it was happening just across the city. Every morning from then on I watched Good Morning America.

I wanted to know more about what happened; I wanted to know why anyone would do such a thing; and mostly, I wanted to hear the stories. I knew, right then, in the fifth grade, I wanted to be a journalist.

Looking back ten years later, I remember the patriotism this country showed, yet it seems that camaraderie has vanished. It was almost forgotten, that is until last May when President Obama announced the death of Osama bin Laden. Being in the nation's capital, I felt that love for America just as strong as when former President George W. Bush vowed to get those behind the attack.

Cassandra

I was 10 years old on September 11, 2001 and had just begun the 5th grade; it was also my grandma's birthday. I remember crying after the second plane hit the Twin Towers, in fear that my father was in danger because he works in military defense. Though, I don't think it was until years later that I fully grasped the volume and horror of the events.

Now, looking back at the tragedy that took place ten years ago and the events that came after, I feel we are closer as nation, though still lack an understanding of why such events took place and how we have been affected by it. I am proud to live in a nation that allows free flow of information, and I believe if 9/11 has taught me anything, personally, it is that I, and all citizens should take advantage of the ability to know our government.

Involvement does not have to be immense, but simple liberties such as the ability to vote or assemble should be taken advantage of. Since 9/11, my awareness of the nation as a whole and the decision-makers who run it have grown greatly. Share your 9/11 stories at roundupdaily.com.

Officials question security in the post-9/11 world

Ten years ago today, brothers Hamza al-Ghamdi and Ahmed al-Ghamdi arrived in Boston, made their way to Cambridge, and checked into The Charles Hotel for the night.

A week before, Hamza al-Ghamdi purchased tickets for himself and his older brother for United Airlines Flight 175—a flight on which they would, on September 11, 2001, hijack and crash into the South Tower of the World Trade Center.

As the tenth anniversary of the September 11 attacks near, events around Harvard U. are commemorating the attacks and their transformative effect on the country. Last night, the Institute of Politics hosted a forum discussion about how America has been shaped by the attacks in the past decade.

The panel—"9/11: Ten Years On"—focused on what moderator Graham T. Allison Jr. called the most pressing questions about post-9/11 America: Are we safer? Are we more aware? What mistakes have we made in hindsight?

Former Director of the National Counterterrorism Center Michael E. Leiter said that he is confident that America is a safer place after 9/11 because of, among other reasons, drastic changes in the intelligence community and acute sense of awareness among the government and citizenry prompted by the attacks. Still, Leiter and other panelists acknowledged that an individual or small group will always have the potential to do a great deal of harm.

"One big issue that our generation and the people in this room are going to face, is that technology makes it easier to kill people," Leiter said, adding that "dumber and dumber people with less and less training are going to be able to harness these technologies."

Kennedy School Professor of International Relations R. Nicholas Burns, who was finishing his first month as the U.S. Ambassador to NATO on 9/11, said that the U.S. needs to return to outsmarting its enemies instead of blindly applying force.

"What was interesting about the last decade is that the military was on the front, and diplomacy was on reserve," Burns said, adding that "the diplomats, economists, aid workers, and journalists need to be the front line" instead of the military. "We can't fight everybody. You can only do that so much." But like so many conversations about 9/11, the conversation inevitably strayed to personal stories from the panelists, who recalled their personal interactions with the tragedy. Leiter had his high school prom and swearing-in ceremony for the Navy in the Twin Towers, and ate his high school graduation dinner in the Twin Towers' top floor restaurant, Windows On The World. Allison's wife had bought a ticket for American Airlines Flight 11, but cancelled the trip last minute. Allison still has the boarding pass.

ACES Ambassadors will attend State Fair

By Candice Corley | Staff Writer

The College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences at New Mexico State University are sending twelve Ambassadors to the New Mexico State Fair in Albuquerque this year.

The ACES Ambassadors serve as the face of the College of ACES. The Ambassadors help with numerous events put on by the college and by the university. They also help recruit students and speak with Alumni and donors regarding the college. The majority of students in the Agricultural College have been involved in Future Farmers of America (FFA) and 4-H.

According to Chelsea Bader, ACES recruiter and co-advisor for the ACES Ambassador team, ACES Ambassadors become Ambassadors by going through a selection process every February or March. The students are nominated by a professor in their home department, complete an application, are observed doing team building activities and

Professor studies immigrant licences

By Cherish Marquez | Staff Writer

Undocumented immigrants have been viewed as the cause for the high rate of uninsured drivers in the state of New Mexico, but the numbers show an irrelevant amount in the state's insurance rate.

Associate professor of finance and business law J. Tim Query conducted research on the issue of undocumented immigrants obtaining licenses and the rate of uninsured drivers in New Mexico. According to Query, there is currently a debate on whether New Mexico should continue the current policy and allow undocumented immigrants to obtain driver's licenses.

New Mexico's un-insurance rate is listed as number two in the nation according to the insurance research council who takes accident data across the nation and bases their research on each state.

The interest in the study was based off of New Mexico, Washington and Utah whose rates of uninsured drivers are among the lowest and rank about 40th said Query. Utah issues licenses to undocumented immigrants, but drivers can only use the licenses to drive said Query.

"Allowing people to access a drivers license without proving legal residency made little difference and some states had lower rates of uninsured drivers and some states had higher rates," Query said.

What did matter though were the percentages of unemployment rates. New Mexico was in the top ten poorest states in the nation according to U.S Census Bureau.

"If there is a higher rate of uninsured motorists, then the rate you pay for insurance goes up," Query said. "It is more expen-

Twelve ambassadors are going to the State Fair this year to help out with livestock shows. Those students are Patrick Abalos, Ryan Best, Dalli Chavez, Tate Hoisington, Monty Lane, Britney Lardner, Seth Pollock, Mabelle Roybal, Sara Rush, Dawna Walter, T.J. Wood and Haley Montes.

Students will be helping out in a number of aspects during Livestock Week at the State Fair, including helping exhibitors unload tack and supplies. The Ambassadors will also be recruiting potential students and plan on giving exhibitors a chance to win a $500 scholarship to the College of ACES.

They will also participate in milking demonstrations, 4-H dog shows, wool judging, swine, goat, and steer shows and many other events. The Livestock show schedule for the New Mexico State Fair can be found at http://exponm.com/fair-schedules/livestock-show-schedule/.

According to Bader, the Ambassadors do not do any preparation for the State Fair. They just brush up on the departments and majors within the College in order to answer questions to the best of their ability.

The State Fair has a large concentration of FFA and 4-H members, which are huge partners with the College of ACES.

"We find it important that NMSU has a presence at the State Fair and that the public knows that we are supporting such an important event for our state's youth," Bader said. "It's also a great opportunity to share information about our majors to students."

The New Mexico State Fair will be held at EXPO New Mexico grounds (formerly known as the fairgrounds) in Albuquerque. The State Fair will take place from Sept.9th until Sept. 25th. Information regarding admission prices, hours, concerts and events can be found at www.exponm.com.

Newman Center aids Catholic lifestyle

By Jaclyn Rivera | Staff Writer

Faith is an important part of students' lives at New Mexico State University, and for the students of the Catholic Newman Center (CNC), it is not just part of a religion, but rather of a lifestyle.

"[The Newman Center] is a place where students can be open about ideas and feelings, combine them with a relationship with God and try to get closer to him," said nursing major Melissa Sandoval. "Then He will guide you in the right path in everything you do, including school."

Though faith can be defined in many ways, the members of CNC see faith as a very important attribute not only as a catholic, but also as a student receiving their education.

"I think as a catholic student, born and raised, I never had a chance to really decide what my faith was going to be. So I put it on my part to attend mass, to become part of the ministry team and study the bible," said biochemistry major Bobby Guerrera. "That's the biggest part of faith. Discovering what religion truly is to me."

Student minister Amanda Orta, who acts as a representative to the school and church, takes pride in their group for being accepting to all students no matter what their religious affiliation.

"The cool thing about Newman is that it's merely an invitation," said Orta. "We respect people where they are in life and how they are which is really hard sometimes."

"Faith is kind of a way for you to see yourself and God in connection with other people around you. I think it's something that ties all of us together," said kinesiology major Ivan Torres.

As well as being known for their hospitality, CNC also hosts numerous events to reach out other students on campus.

The next event planned is the Full Moon Mass at the White Sands National Monument on Monday, Sept. 12. A carpool will be available for anyone interested in attending.

CNC also gets together every Wednesday night for Mass at 5:30 p.m. followed by dinner cooked by the members. They also provide lunch every weekday between 11:15am to 1 pm for any student wanting a meal. Lunch menus may vary, but the cost is always a dollar.

involves going to mosque for daily prayer and practicing Arabic daily.

MSA creates events that are set up for members. At one event, the members went to a church to discuss their feelings, one in particular was about how it feels to be an American Muslim.

"It's just like any other American with any other faith. We enjoy freedom. We love this country," Al-Gahmi said. "In fact, we may enjoy freedom even more. Being Muslim makes us more connected as freedom lovers because of the rights we have in our country."

Maldonado said Muslims take responsibility for their classes.

"We will not sign up for a class and not complete our work. We should fulfill our responsibility."

According to MSA, Islam is an Arabic word which means commitment to submit and surrender to God so that one can live in peace. Peace is achieved through active obedience to the commandments of God because God is the source of all peace.

"Part of our faith means our submission to God," said Maldonado. "Every aspect of our lives from prayer to daily interactions, school, business, family is all part of faith."

Al-Gahmi said that Islam is not something that is concentrated. "It's what is on the outside. It's how you interact with people."

MSA meets about every two weeks unless the members cannot attend.

"We try to have gatherings in order to encourage each other and student life," Maldonado said.

August was the Islamic month of fasting. Maldonado said that during the last few days of the month, the calling was even more personal due to the fast.

sive because our rate is so high."

The study has since gone all the way to legislation, where New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez has taken into intense consideration.

When asked on the Jim Villanucci show where the governor stands on the policy, Martinez said, "I oppose that any undocumented immigrant can have a drivers license."

A debate occurs when many states have abolished this policy possibly encouraging many undocumented immigrants to move to New Mexico to obtain a license.

"Many are coming here and it takes very little identification for you to be able to get a drivers license," Martinez said. "Therefore, they can move around the country freely with that kind of an ID and I do not support that at all."

Since Query conducted the study, politics have been attached to it, leaving him with tough questions to answer.

"The big question is that there are 80,000 undocumented immigrants in the state of New Mexico that have their drivers licenses," said Query. "What's going to happen to them?"

The elimination of the policy could lead undocumented immigrants in New Mexico to leave to another state like Washington where this policy is still intact. Query said the eradication of this policy for all states could lead to immigrants having to go back to their own country.

is called the 'campus team' which aims spread the word of faith to students on campus. Alberson said the group accomplishes this by passing out water bottles with informational pamphlets on them or through one-on-one discipleship, which offers new believers a chance to be mentored by a practicing Christian.

"I don't just go to God when I need help; I use God for guidance as well. It's something that's always there whether you realize it or not," Alberson said of his personal relationship with God.

If students are interested in becoming involved in the Christian Challenge, an group holds an event called, "Cross Training," held Thursday at 9 p.m. where students study the Bible. The Christian Challenge is located at 1313 E. University Las Cruces, NM 88001.

Another Christian organization on the NSMU campus is Aggies for Christ, which is sponsored by the University Church of Christ.

"We practice faith in one main way, and it is broken up into three other ways," said Greg Bowles, the head minister at University Church of Christ.

UCC members aim to live a life that mirrors the life of Jesus; this includes three goals members are expected to carry out, including studying the word of God, living in a community of believers and serving the community.

Students stay involved by going to large worship every Wednesday at 7 p.m. There are also 20 small groups, which meet up to practice their faith and provide various fun activities for students. Students can look up a schedule of activities at: www.aggiesforChrist.net.

Bowels offered some guidance for those seeking to find a road to faith,

"Never stop asking honest questions. Honest questions deserve honest answers. And don't be intimidated by others arrogance."

For anyone interested in becoming part of Aggies for Christ or The University Church of Christ, they offer a joint Sunday service at 11:20 a.m., where many walks of life gather to worship and explore.

Up & running: Aggie cross country season is underway

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

Coming off a strong performance at the 2010 Western Athletic Conference Championships, the new season is underway for the New Mexico State cross country team.

The Aggies opened the 2011 season at the Lobo Invitational in Albuquerque, where they competed against rivals University of New Mexico and University of Texas El Paso.

"I think we started off the season on a great note," Meaghan Harkins, cross country assistant coach, said. "Both on the men's and the women's side, we have the strongest team we've ever assembled. We had big improvements as far as placing in this race over our performances last year."

Aggie runners Courtney and Camille Schultz both earned top five finishes in the women's 5k event. Courtney finished fourth in the event with a time of 18:02:9, while Camille finished fifth with a time of 18:18:6.

NM State will now travel to Chamizal Memorial Park in El Paso to compete in the Lori Fitzgerald Invitational, where the team hopes to continue to improve off its season opener in Albuquerque.

"It's a very low-key meet just because it falls right in between our opener and our home meet," Harkins said. "So our top ten athletes from the Lobo Invitational are hopefully going to be using this race more as a workout. It's definitely preparation for later on in the season."

The Aggies will take a more serious approach for the Kachina Classic in Las Cruces Sept. 17 when the team will host its familiar foes.

"It's great for us because UTEP and UNM are both teams that are fairly competitive," Harkins said. "So starting off our season competing against that type of talent is a good way to set you up for the rest of the season."

Both the men's and women's teams have high expectations for this season and hope to peak before heading to Hawai'i for the WAC Championships in October.

"The WAC Championships are the pinnacle of our season," Harkins said. "We are going to sacrifice nothing early on the season to make sure that we are peaking and ready to rumble at WAC."

PLAYER PROFILE

MEREDITH HAYS

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

Notable High School Accomplishments: Led Hereford High School to a 45-3 record and state championship in 2009. Earned four varsity letters, was named Under Armor AVCA All-American, 3-4A Newcomer of the Year, and graduated in the top 10 off her class in 2010.

Q: When and how did you start playing volleyball?

A: I just played YMCA ball starting my third grade year, but I didn't start competitive playing until seventh grade. That's when I started to play in clubs and of course junior-high and everything.

Q: Why did you decide to come and play at New Mexico State?

A: There were lots of reasons. We have some really great girls including Kelsey Phillips, she told me to mention her, and some of our other seniors. But honestly, it's a competitive program. The coaches are wonderful, the girls are wonderful. It felt like home and it felt like this is where God wanted me to be.

Q: What has been the biggest difference you've noticed in collegiate volleyball compared to high school volleyball?

A: Expectations are higher definitely. As you get older in high school, the expectations grow that people have for you but you come into the collegiate level, and errors that were acceptable where the coach would say 'It's okay, you're all right, just keep swinging." If you make that mistake out here, you're told it's a concentration error and you need to focus. You're expected to be able to keep anything in play, which is a good expectation. Honestly, you're being treated like an adult and you handle your own time but all around, I love it though.

Q: Other than volleyball, what are some of your other interests and hobbies?

A: I found a really good church that I love, it's called Las Cruces First and I'm there every Sunday and Wednesday that we're not traveling. Our freshman class is very close and we like to hang out together, we like to go to Caliche's together. I'm really close with Jene Coppedg so we hang out quite a bit. Maggi Jo and I go and do Bible studies at Starbucks, so just things like that.

FOOTBALL BRIEFS

Rodgers rolling

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

New Mexico State senior wide receiver and kick returner Taveon Rodgers was named Verizon Western Athletic Conference Special Teams Player of the Week.

The award came as result of Rodgers' performance in the Aggies season opener against Ohio University Saturday night in which he returned four kickoffs for 177 yards including a 97-yard return for a touchdown. This is the first time Rodgers has been named WAC Player of the Week.

According to NMStateSports.com, Rodgers was also named National Kick Returner of the Week by CollegeFootballPerformance.com.

NMSU football makes a splash in the national spotlight

By Zane Klemo | Executive News Producer

Behind the big arm of starting quarterback Andrew Manley, NMSU is currently sitting 10th in the NCAA in passing yards per game.

Manley passed a career high 362 yards in the loss against the Ohio Bobcats.

Although one game is a small sample, head coach Dewayne Walker's offense could be on the rise this season by slicing a small piece of the national spotlight pie for their performance against the Bobcats.

Aggies travel to Minnesota to face Golden Gophers

By Anthony Esparza | Staff Writer

The New Mexico State football team travel to TCF Bank Stadium to face the University of Minnesota Golden Gophers of the Big Ten conference Saturday afternoon.

Minnesota opened the season with a 19-17 loss on the road against the 25th-ranked Southern California Trojans. The Gophers scored two touchdowns in the second half to pull within two points of the Trojans, but were unable to get the win in Jerry Kill's first game as head coach.

"They're well coached, they play hard, and I've been impressed watching them," NM State head coach DeWayne Walker said. "They have a manchild at quarterback who can run the football. So it'll be another challenge for us as we progress and get better and get ready for conference play."

Despite a 44-24 loss to Ohio in the season opener, Walker said the team's performance late in the game has given the Aggies a positive attitude heading into the game on Saturday.

"If we could have played that way earlier in the game, we could have made it very interesting," Walker said. "I think our guys know the potential of this football team. We've got 12 games left, so we've just got to continue to improve and get ourselves ready for conference play."

Center for the Arts to open November 2011

By Trevor Nazario | Staff Writer

The new Center for the Arts building, on the corner of Espina Street and University Avenue, is scheduled for completion on Nov 7, 2012.

This new state of the art building will house many of our art programs at New Mexico State University. It will provide a place for theatre, dance, music and art. This new facility gives a chance for these programs previously located at separate places on campus, to interact with one another and provide more quality and cooperative education for the students.

Greg Walke, the university architect and campus planner, said, "A state-of-the-art performance and teaching space for theater and dance, but also a wonderful space available and functional for other types of art, performance and lectures."

"The emphasis in the design is on a good teaching/learning facility, so there are things one might not otherwise see in a typical facility of this size, such as a complete fly loft and complete theater technology systems," said Walke.

Walke said that the building would also house classrooms that can be used for different arts-related teaching, offices, a large, multi-purpose lobby and display space, and a multi-functional rehearsal hall that is designed to serve many functions for dance, theater, and other university functions.

Tom Smith, the theatre department head, said, "It's a chance for the arts to come together and have projects that utilize each program, a feat that is more difficult when we are all spread out and without an effective building."

The Center for the Arts has been in planning for years and the start of its construction, broke ground in July 2010, and begun the phase one of the developments.

Phase one of the construction includes the completion of a 49,000 square foot building containing a 500-seat theatre bigger than the Hershal Zohn theatre on campus, along

Despite negative connotation, electronic festival draws thousands

By Cassandra Romero | Editor-in-Chief

Cohen Stadium was transformed into El Paso's largest dance floor this past weekend, as promotion group SMG Events held the Sun City Music Festival, an event showcasing over 30 international DJs.

The event took place Saturday Sept. 3 and Sunday Sept. 4, and featured popular DJs Armin van Buren, Afrojack and Nero among others. SCMF was the first event of its kind to come to El Paso, and drew crowds above 10,000 per day said SMG staff photographer Mario Arizpe.

"I've been going to music festivals for a few years now and there hasn't been anything as big as this event in this general area ever except for Neon Desert," said Michelle Mason a recent New Mexico State University journalism graduate.

Though a negative stigma has followed raves and electronic music since the death of a minor last year at the Los Angeles Electric Daisy Carnival, supporters say the chaos that ensues from large crowds at raves is to be expected at such events and is even similar to early rock and roll and hip-hop shows.

"The music festival business is growing rapidly and many people are enjoying what is being brought to them," said Mason. "Most people have a bad perception of these things, but really it's all about having a good time, dancing and meeting people with the same interests."

No injuries were reported at SCMF, though paramedics and law enforcement officials were present to ensure public safety. SCMF featured three stages at Cohen, each hosting different genres of the music. According to SMG, the event has been in preparation for over a year and a half.

"I was fortunate enough to see all the behind the scenes work that was put into this event," said Arizpe "All the staff members were on point, and the artists loved the energetic crowd."

Arizpe said his favorite artists at SCMF included Funkagenda, Wolfgang Gartner, Armin Van Buuren, Nero, Crystal Castles and Sander Van Doorn.

"No other show that has happened in El Paso compares to this event that SMG put on," said Ruben Cisneros, a junior biology major who attended the event. "The lights were incredible the vibes were great and no other show can top all the, talent that was brought for those two nights."

Cisneros said festivals such as SCMF are not all about drugs, but rather, positive vibes and being responsible, though such shows are not for everyone.

"[People who have a negative outlook on raves and electronic shows] probably haven't found the emotional tact with the atmosphere," Cisneros said.

SMG Events will host dubstep artist Skrillex Sept.26 at Buchannan's in El Paso. For more information on tickets and SMG visit www.facebook.com/SMGEVENTSOFFICIAL.

with classrooms and rehearsal space.

Phase 2 of development will include studio and classroom space for various art programs, an art conservation laboratory and an art museum and gallery. Finally, phase 3 will allow seating for 1,200 visitors.
